The first of these is the fact that the state of the world is a constant flux. It is not possible to have a state of affairs which is unchanging and permanent. The only thing which is constant is the fact that the world is constantly changing.

THE FIRST PRINCIPLE

The first principle of the philosophy of Heraclitus is that everything is in a state of flux and change. This is the first principle of the philosophy of Heraclitus.
The second principle is that the flux is not random but is governed by a certain law or order. This is the second principle of the philosophy of Heraclitus.

The third principle is that the flux is not chaotic but is governed by a certain law or order. This is the third principle of the philosophy of Heraclitus.
The fourth principle is that the
the fourth principle of the philosophy of Heraclitus.

The fifth principle is that the
by a certain law or order. This is the fifth principle of the philosophy of Heraclitus.
The sixth principle is that the
by a certain law or order. This is the sixth principle of the philosophy of Heraclitus.

The seventh principle is that the
by a certain law or order. This is the seventh principle of the philosophy of Heraclitus.
The eighth principle is that the
by a certain law or order. This is the eighth principle of the philosophy of Heraclitus.

The ninth principle is that the
the ninth principle of the philosophy of Heraclitus.
