The first of these is the fact that the world is not a uniform whole, but a collection of diverse and often conflicting interests and powers.
 This is the case in all spheres of human activity, from the family to the nation, from the church to the state. The second is the fact that these interests and powers are constantly in flux, and that the balance of power is never stable.
 This is the case in all spheres of
 state. The third is the fact that the interests and powers of the different groups are often in direct conflict with each other.
 This is the case in all spheres of
 state.
