The first principle is that the world is not a uniform whole, but a collection of parts, each of which has its own laws and characteristics. This is the principle of diversity.

The second principle is that the world is not a static whole, but a dynamic whole, which is constantly changing and developing. This is the principle of change.

The third principle is that the world is not a chaotic whole, but an ordered whole, which follows certain laws and patterns. This is the principle of order.

The fourth principle is that the world is not a separate whole, but an interconnected whole, in which all parts are related to each other. This is the principle of unity.

The fifth principle is that the world is not a material whole, but a spiritual whole, which is based on the human mind and its activities. This is the principle of spirit.

The sixth principle is that the world is not a natural whole, but a cultural whole, which is created by human beings through their social and cultural activities. This is the principle of culture.

The seventh principle is that the world is not a physical whole, but a moral whole, which is based on the human conscience and its moral judgments. This is the principle of morality.

The eighth principle is that the world is not a scientific whole, but a philosophical whole, which is based on the human search for truth and meaning. This is the principle of philosophy.

The ninth principle is that the world is not a historical whole, but a future whole, which is based on the human hope and its aspirations. This is the principle of hope.

The tenth principle is that the world is not a present whole, but an eternal whole, which is based on the human faith and its beliefs. This is the principle of faith.

The first part of the book is devoted to a description of the various species of plants and animals which are found in the island of Java. The author then proceeds to a description of the climate and soil of the island, and finally to a description of the various tribes of people which inhabit it. The book is written in a clear and concise style, and is well illustrated with numerous woodcuts of plants and animals.

The appearance of the light blue flowers from the 1st or 2nd July, 1871, is very beautiful and is very like the flowers of the 1870 season.

The plants which are now in flower are very like the plants which were in flower in 1870. The flowers are very like the flowers of 1870.
